

“CRE The magic Bullet”

Saving Money and/or Creating Value

CoreNet Global
Brisbane Chapter Symposium

BRISBANE

5 MAY 2010

A look at the various ways in which Corporate Real Estate (CRE) Managers and Property Managers are achieving cost reductions and/or optimising the overall value for their organisations.

There are many ways in which today's Property or CRE Manager can save costs in the operation and occupation of the built environment. Issues such as advanced building technology, improved planning, programming and maintenance techniques, life-cycle improvement strategies, space and accommodation strategies, alternate workplace design and space utilisation strategies, and many more initiatives; are all ways in which organisations can create value for their shareholders/stakeholders and improve corporate performance.

This is directly relevant for Building Owner/Occupiers, however Tenants also have the opportunity to reduce the costs of occupancy in collaboration with their Landlord to ensure that everyone involved in a Lease Agreement is controlling their expenditure, cost profile and/or value proposition.

The 2010 Brisbane Symposium is a forum for hearing what innovation is making a difference in reducing the costs of Corporate Real Estate Management. Additionally, or if costs savings is not the imperative, how are CRE managers creating value for their organisations. This could be the latest in building technology or improved design of the workplace. This Symposium has one aim – to demonstrate ways in which people in the industry are currently saving money and/or creating value.

Presentations include:

- How is Suncorp's Real Estate Partnership with JLL adding value to the Bank?
- Refurbishment of Existing Buildings Good for the Planet and the Bottom Line
- How are Moreton Bay Regional, Logan and Ipswich City Council's Adding Value through Economic Development to the South-East Qld Region
- What is the Real Cost of Sustainability – Saving or Spending for Green
